Cyberbullying: The Offspring of Social Media and Adolescent Development

Brief Bio:

Associate Professor of Psychology at Eastern Kentucky University and runs a private practice. His research interests are in cyberbullying, telehealth, adolescents, and using technology to enhance school psychologist's practice. He is NASP's Online Communication Coordinator, Historian, and writes the Just a Click Away column in the Communique.

Abstract:

Cyberbullying is an outgrowth of adolescents living more of their social life online. Much of this online life is invisible to adults. This workshop will highlight the latest technology that adolescents are using and how developmental factors in adolescence influence their use of technology to cyberbully. The workshop will then focus on possible directions for school policy and interventions.
